Late June 2011

Not your grandmother's daylilies

This is the height of daylily season. Nothing beats a well-placed and -planted daylily in July.
Prolific and abundant, they take minimal care once established.
Plant in rich soil with good organic matter in sun to part shade.

Their only problem is that deer love them, too, but they are well worth the few squirts of Liquid Fence to light up your garden. Look for more and more wonderful daylilies coming along in the next few years. Patents are running out on some of the most fabulous colors and combos, making these extraordinary beauties available to us common folk.

Be sure to visit us during our Anniversary Sale July 1-4!
